There is not a family in Miami who claims the rights of citizenship that is not interested in the question of the city acquiring the ownership of public utilities—the water works, electric light plant, public docks, ice factory and telephone system. The economic value of such ownership is clear to all and when a proposition is put before the property owners by our business men for the acquisition of the various concerns there is little doubt but what the people almost universally will lead their hearty co-operation. The experience of other municipalities have been of such a nature as to offer the best encouragement. Even in cities where graft is allowed to flourish unchecked the month's reports show that the people have money-making business in the conduct of their public utilities.—Miami Metropolis.
